Locking up those special items

Company seeks to offer different concept for storage

By Gaye Bunderson
 IDAHO BUSINESS REVIEW

In looking over the products and services businesses offer, Mark Gilbreath noticed that, increasingly, companies were attempting to take it up a notch, as the saying goes.

"Even a cup of coffee is now made with craft, care, and a bit of artisanship," he said. It's not like the days of stopping into the local convenience store and grabbing a Styrofoam cup of brew, he stated.

So, in forming ideas for their own enterprise, Gilbreath and his partner, Greg McVay, sought to bring that "take it up a notch" notion to their own endeavor. They decided to enter the storage building business, calling their company Freedom Storage.

Wait a minute. Storage buildings? You mean those bland, similar looking structures often behind chain link fences? How do you bring a higher level of quality to something so ordinary?

Well, leave it to the entrepreneurial mind to see a need and fill it.

"We looked at the storage industry and wanted to bring a solutions orientation," Gilbreath said. "We realized that when people are looking into storing something, they're undergoing a lifestyle transition."

They're moving, marrying, divorcing, seeking a safe place for something precious, said Gilbreath — it's a major shift in their lives. The same is true for businesses that may be downsizing, expanding, or seeking a safe place for vital documents.

"We aspire to fully understand their situation, rather than just offer them X-amount of space for X-amount of dollars," said Gilbreath.

Freedom Storage provides services such as trucks, boxes, and consultations on how to obtain help moving. "We'll assess your needs and customize and make your storage space more functional, including such choices as shelving, door size, and climate control," he said.

Along with that, each Freedom Storage site is built in a fortress-style design; offers key code access and video surveillance, as well as onsite staff who perform daily lock checks; includes 24/7 automated kiosks; provides mailing, faxing, copying, shipping, and Internet access services; and has meeting spaces for businesses.

The most recent Freedom Storage Center opened in Caldwell in May; previous sites, including one in Meridian, opened in May of 2006 and, in Star, in November of 2006.

Gilbreath's resume includes work as a design engineer in California's Silicon Valley, and McVay began his professional career in technology sales for Wyle Laboratories in Santa Clara. The partners bring a sense of social responsibility to their business, are involved in fundraising efforts, and are committed to green building standards.
